

Real choices for real change on the 2008 Peace & Freedom Party presidential primary ballot

On February 5, 2008, Peace and Freedom Party voters will be able to choose among seven candidates for president. Unlike the candidates of the Democrats and Republicans, the candidates in the Peace and Freedom Party primary are all for publicly-financed quality universal health care (without insurance company red tape), for withdrawal from Iraq and Afghanistan and an end to our militarist foreign policy (not “repositioning” or attacking different countries), for the rights of working people instead of the profits of the corporate rich who fund the two major parties. They stand for genuine change in the structure and priorities of our society, not just for talk about change.

Ralph Nader

is North America’s best-known consumer advocate. He ran for president as an independent in 1996, 2000 and 2004.

Brian Moore

is the presidential nominee of the Socialist Party USA. He was an independent anti-war candidate for U.S. Senate in Florida in 2006. His website is www.votebrianmoore.com.

Cynthia McKinney

is a former member of Congress for Georgia. She was driven from office by outside forces and Republican voters, with the complicity of the Democratic Party national leadership. Her website is www.runcynthiarun.org.

Gloria La Riva

is the presidential candidate of the Party for Socialism and Liberation. She is active in the labor and anti-war movements and was the Peace & Freedom Party candidate for governor in 1994 and 1998. Her website is www.votePSL.org.

Stanley Hetz was the Socialist Party candidate for U.S. Senate from Pennsylvania in 2006. His website is <http://stanleyhetz.250x.com>.

John Crockford

is a retired Border Patrol officer who is active in the fight for immigrant rights. He is Fresno County chair of the Peace & Freedom Party. His website is <http://crockford.org>.

Stewart Alexander

is Executive Director of the African American Civil Liberties Union (AACLU). He was the Peace & Freedom Party candidate for Lieutenant Governor in 2006. His website is www.stewartalexandercares.org.
